Hello.
I guess I should say a few words on this QR code and the link. Unfortunately those are excessively used in advertisement and marketing and to be honest, I'm kinda sick of them. And I distrust them. Like, ideologically.
Usually somebody wants to sell stuff to you or evaluate and analyze consumer choices and so on. I don't want that. If you scan this code with your phone (or enter the link[°], in case the scanning doesn't work for you) you'll be redirected to a playlist with music. So you are sitting in the waiting room of the Ordnungsamt, and you're reading this note, so I guess it will be a while until your number comes up. I picked 16 songs, which I thought would be nice to listen to, while waiting. 16 songs have a running time of approximately one hour. That's me being optimistic that you don't have to listen to the whole list. It gets a bit melancholy at the end. And while you sit here and wait for your appointment, I sit at home and wait for somebody to listen to my playlist. Somebody is waiting for the person who's waiting. And wouldn't it be really great if more and more people would hum Please please let me get what I want while attending their appointments at the Ordnungsamt Berlin-Mitte?
Because it's so terribly catchy. And also quite true, in this situation.
Good luck.
Max
